

CENTRAL ASIA AND THE CAUCASUS

Journal of Social and Political Studies

---

HOW CAN
THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY CONTRIBUTE TO PEACE AND STABILITY
IN AND AROUND CHECHNIA?:

---

Odd Gunnar SKAGESTAD

---

4
2000

CENTRAL ASIA AND THE CAUCASUS. Information and Analytical Center (Sweden)

FOUNDED AND PUBLISHED BY
CENTRAL ASIA AND THE CAUCASUS INFORMATION AND ANALYTICAL CENTER

Center registration number: 620720 - 0459
Journal registration number: 23 614
State Administration for Patents and Registration of Sweden

Editorial Staff

Murad ESENOV Editor

Tel./fax: (46) 920 62016 E-mail: murad@communiqué.se

Karim SHUKUHI Deputy Editor (Washington)

Tel./fax: (1 - 703) 8201796 E-mail: ksh12m@hotmail.com

Irina EGOROVA Executive Secretary (Moscow)

Tel.: (7 - 095) 3163146 E-mail: ira@mosinfo.ru

Klara KHAFIZOVA represents the journal in Kazakhstan (Almaty)

Tel./fax: (7 - 3272) 62 95 54 E-mail: kainar@itte.kz

Ainura ELEBAEVA represents the journal in Kyrgyzstan (Bishkek)

Tel.: (996 - 312) 47 26 12 E-mail: ainur@iuk.kg

Saodat OLIMOVA represents the journal in Tajikistan (Dushanbe)

Tel.: (992 - 372) 21 89 95 E-mail: Olimov@tajik.net

Gulnoza SAIDAZIMOVA represents the journal in Uzbekistan (Tashkent)

Tel.: (998 - 712) 34 11 22 E-mail: GSaidazimova@central.nbu.com

Eldar ISMAYILOV represents the journal in Azerbaijan (Baku)

Tel.: (994 - 12) 94 08 19 E-mail: eldar@vcu.azeri.com

David PETROSYAN represents the journal in Armenia (Erevan)

Tel.: (374 - 2) 52 42 79 E-mail: dave@public.arminco.com

Paata ZAKAREISHVILI represents the journal in Georgia (Tbilisi)

Tel.: (995 - 32) 99 75 31 E-mail: paatazak@access.sanet.ge

Vladimir MESAMED represents the journal in the Middle East (Jerusalem)

Tel.: (972 - 2) 5882332 E-mail: mssamed@olive.mscc.huji.ac.il

Dina NEWMAN represents the journal in the UK (London)

Tel.: (44) 208 459 41 81 E-mail: dina.newman@bbc.co.uk

Boris CHUKHOVICH represents the journal in Canada (Montreal)

E-mail: boris@colba.net

Rustem ZHANGUZHIN represents the journal in Ukraine (Kiev)

Tel.: (044) 264 79 13 E-mail: kbp@niurr.gov.ua

EDITORIAL BOARD

- Garnik ASATRIAN Doctor of Philology, professor, head of the Department of Iranian Studies, Erevan State University (Armenia)
- Murat AUEZOV Executive Director, Soros-Kazakhstan Foundation (Kazakhstan)
- Levan BERDZENISHVILI General Director, National Library of Georgia (Georgia)
- Bakyt BESHIMOV Doctor of History, professor, Ambassador Executive and Plenipotentiary of the Republic of Kyrgyzstan to India (Kyrgyzstan)
- Ariel COHEN Doctor, leading analyst, The Heritage Foundation, U.S.A. (U.S.A.)
- Rakhmon FARMONOV Doctor of History, professor, head of the Political Sciences Department, University of World Economy and Diplomacy of Uzbekistan (Uzbekistan)
- William FIERMAN Doctor of Political Sciences, Professor of Indiana University (U.S.A.)
- Paul GOBLE Director of Communications, Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty (U.S.A.)
- Alexander IGNATENKO Doctor of Philosophy, specialist in Islamic studies, expert of the RF State Duma (Russian Federation)
- Ashurboi IMOMOV Ph.D. (Law), assistant professor, head of the Department of Constitutional Law, Tajik National University (Tajikistan)
- Lena JONSON Doctor, senior researcher, Swedish Institute of International Affairs (Sweden)
- Enver KISRIEV Professor of the Daghestanian Scientific Center, RAS (Russian Federation)
- Hasan KULIEV Doctor of Philosophy, professor, department head, Institute of Philosophy, AS of Azerbaijan (Azerbaijan)
- Jacob M. LANDAU Professor of political sciences, The Hebrew University of Jerusalem (Israel)
- Alexei MALASHENKO Doctor of History, professor, head of the sector of religion and ideology, Institute of Oriental Studies, RAS (Russian Federation)
- Asim MOLLAZADE Doctor of Medicine, President, Euro-Atlantic Center of Azerbaijan (Azerbaijan)
- Igor MOURADIAN Ph.D. (Econ.), Executive Director, High Technology Foundation (Armenia)
- Vitaly NAUMKIN Doctor of History, professor, Director, Center of Strategic and International Studies of RF (Russian Federation)
- Kenes NURPEISOV Doctor of History, professor, department head, Institute of History, AS of Kazakhstan (Kazakhstan)
- Mukhabbatsho RUZADOROV Head of the Scientific, Cultural and Educational Section, Majlis, Gorno-Badakhshan Autonomous Region; coordinator of the Aga Khan project (Tajikistan)
- S. Frederick STARR Professor, Chairman, The Central Asia-Caucasus Institute, The Johns Hopkins University (U.S.A.)

The materials that appear in the journal do not necessarily reflect the Editorial Board and the Editors' opinion

Editorial Office:

CENTRAL ASIA AND THE CAUCASUS
Rödhaakegränd 21. 97454 Luleå
SWEDEN

WEB ADDRESS:
<http://www.ca-c.org>

© Central Asia and the Caucasus, 2000.

CENTRAL ASIA AND THE CAUCASUS
Journal of Social and Political Studies
No. 4, 2000

---

IN THIS ISSUE:

---

SPECIAL FEATURE

DEMOCRACY IN CENTRAL ASIA AND THE CAUCASUS

- Farhod Tolipov. DEMOCRACY, NATIONALISM AND REGIONALISM IN CENTRAL ASIA ..... 7
- Alexander Iskandarian. STATE CONSTRUCTION AND THE SEARCH FOR POLITICAL IDENTITY IN THE NEW TRANSCAUCASIAN COUNTRIES..... 15
- Rustem Zhanguzhin. DEMOCRATIZATION IN CENTRAL ASIA: SEVERAL COMMENTS ..... 22
- Sabit Zhusupov. DEMOCRATIC REFORMS IN THE REPUBLIC OF KAZAKHSTAN: REALITY AND PROSPECTS ..... 25
- Valentina Kurganskaia, Murat Sabit. THE NATIONAL QUESTION IN THE PLATFORMS OF POLITICAL PARTIES AND MOVEMENTS IN KAZAKHSTAN ..... 36
- Leonid Smirnov. THE MARGINALIZATION OF THE POPULATION AS A FACTOR OF SOCIOPOLITICAL INSTABILITY IN KAZAKHSTAN ..... 46
- Elvira Mamytova. THE PROBLEMS OF FORMING A POLITICAL OPPOSITION IN KYRGYZSTAN ..... 52
- Zoia Arifkhanova. TRADITIONAL COMMUNITIES IN MODERN UZBEKISTAN ..... 56
- Eldar Ismailov. AZERBAIJAN: MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS OVER. WHAT NEXT? ..... 63

Zurab Chiaberishvili.	STABILITY INSTEAD OF DEMOCRACY .....	68
Georgi Nizharadze.	GEORGIAN SOCIETY IN THE CONTEXT OF ITS POLITICAL BEHAVIOR .....	73
Givi Targamadze.	GEORGIA: THE BIG FAMILY IN THE COUNTRY'S POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC LIFE .....	80

THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY AND STRATEGIES FOR PEACE AND STABILITY IN AND AROUND CHECHNIA

(ON THE RESULTS OF THE JOINT CONFERENCE ORGANIZED BY THE SWEDISH INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS AND THE JOURNAL CENTRAL ASIA AND THE CAUCASUS)

Murad Esenov.	PREFACE .....	85
Lena Jonson.	INTRODUCTION .....	86

Possible Russian Strategies for Peace and Stability in Chechnia

Aleksandr Khalimukhamedov.	HOW TO RETURN TO NORMALITY IN CHECHNIA .....	90
Emil Pain.	THE SECOND CHECHEN WAR: POSSIBLE VARIANTS .....	97
Gail W. Lapidus.	RUSSIA'S SECOND CHECHEN WAR: TEN ASSUMPTIONS IN SEARCH OF A POLICY. Comments on Contributions .....	104
Kjell-Åke Nordquist.	COMMENTS ON CONTRIBUTIONS .....	113
Märta-Lisa Magnusson.	COMMENTS ON CONTRIBUTIONS .....	115

Possible Strategies for Stabilizing the Neighborhood

Vitaliy Naumkin.	ON STABILIZATION IN AREAS NEIGHBORING ON CHECHNIA .....	116
Larissa Khoperskaia.	THE NORTHERN CAUCASUS: FACTORS OF CONFRONTATION AND PROSPECTS FOR STABILITY .....	125

Enver Kisriev.	DAGHESTAN: FACTORS OF CONFLICTS AND STABILITY .....	134
Anna Zelkina.	COMMENTS ON CONTRIBUTIONS .....	141
Gennady Chufrin.	COMMENTS ON CONTRIBUTIONS .....	144
Dr. HC Svante E. Cornell.	CHECHNIA, RUSSIA AND THE ISLAMIC FACTOR: A SOURCE OF INSTABILITY IN THE NORTHERN CAUCASUS. Comments on Contributions .....	146

How Can the International Community Contribute to Peace and Stability in and around Chechnia?

S. Neil MacFarlane.	WHAT THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY CAN DO TO SETTLE THE CONFLICT .....	148
Friedemann Müller.	EVENTS IN AND AROUND CHECHNIA AND THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY .....	157
Odd Gunnar Skagestad.	HOW CAN THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY CONTRIBUTE TO PEACE AND STABILITY IN AND AROUND CHECHNIA?: A PESSIMISTIC REPLY .....	165
Taylor Seybolt.	COMMENTS ON CONTRIBUTIONS .....	171

ETHNIC RELATIONS

Rauf Guseinov.	AZERBAIJAN IN THE MIRROR OF ITS ETHNIC COMPOSITION: PAST, PRESENT, FUTURE AND RECOMMENDATIONS .....	174
Gaik Demolian.	THE KARABAKH CONFLICT AND RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN TURKIC-SPEAKING COUNTRIES .....	182

FOR YOUR INFORMATION

The Special Feature section in the next issue will discuss:

Central Asia and the Caucasus

- Religious Extremism
- Regional and State Security
- Energy Projects: Problems and Prospects

so because of a new "great game" involving geopolitical powers, but because the forces of globalization do not allow any such a player to benefit from it. It probably will take a long time until these facts are realized by Russian decision makers and public opinion. Therefore, any optimism about this issue is illusionary. Nevertheless, sometimes miracles happen. A new president has the chance to select new advisers and to develop new strategies. Whether President Putin is the one who will select advisers that tell him about the new rules of the game is doubtful since he owes at least part of his success in the presidential election to those who favor a military solution in Chechnia. But after the elections is not before. So, one should not give up hope.

---

HOW CAN THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY CONTRIBUTE TO PEACE AND STABILITY IN AND AROUND CHECHNIA?: A PESSIMISTIC REPLY

---

Odd Gunnar SKAGESTAD

---

Introduction

In the introduction to his paper, Prof. MacFarlane quoted from a recent newspaper article by a Human Rights Watch investigator, making the following observation on the present Chechen conflict: "The silence of the international community is deafening. To date, the international community has given the Russian government no reason to fear any repercussions for its actions."

It is difficult not to share these sentiments. The change in the international mood since "the First Chechen War" (i.e. the 1994-1996 conflict) is striking. The predominantly sympathetic attitude toward the "freedom fighters" had, by the summer of 1999, largely evaporated and been replaced by disgust and suspicion at the "terrorists." The reasons are, broadly, twofold: (1) Chechen gross mismanagement of own affairs, including the ugly specter of hostage-taking and brutal murders; and (2) The largely successful Russian policy in managing information and news (including skillful diplomacy), thereby manipulating public opinion at home and abroad.

This should also serve to illustrate the powerful role played by the (international) mass media in shaping public opinion and thereby triggering some kind of response (or, as the case may be, non-response) by the so-called international community.

The Chechen Conflict

For a war to be truly victorious, the victor also needs to win the hearts and minds of the vanquished people. Or, if that's a too tall order, at least win some modicum of legitimacy. Chechnia may serve as a useful reminder of the fact that these things are easier said than done. For three centuries, the Russian Empire has tried to conquer Chechnia and the Chechens, so far with mixed or limited success. As any Chechen will tell you, repeated large-scale attempts by the Imperial Power (General Yermolov from 1818 and for decades onwards, Stalin's wholesale deportation in 1944) at annihilation of their nationhood have left an indelible imprint on the collective memory of the Chechen people. And now again, in less than one decade the region has seen two wars which have brought death, misery and immense destruction. Peace and stability seem as elusive as ever.

---

Odd Gunnar Skagestad, Foreign Ministry of Norway.

It is an asymmetrical conflict—not only in terms of relative size/strength/resources, but also in terms of how the conflict is perceived by the parties. Apart from the heavy symbolism of the words “sovereignty” and “independence,” what is the conflict all about?

Roughly speaking, the issue may be summed up as follows:

During the 1994-1996 conflict, the Russian view (which commanded only lukewarm enthusiasm) was declared to be the task of “restoring constitutional order.” In 1999, the prevailing view of the issue had (rather more successfully) been re-defined as “defending Russia's territorial integrity and combating terrorism.”

From the Chechen point of view, the conflict was and remains a “struggle against the colonial oppressor,” including “fighting for national self-determination, specifically defending their homes and families against death and destruction, and ultimately defending the Chechen people against the threat of genocide.”

In other words: Not much common ground on which to build peace and stability.

With the apparent inability of the conflicting parties to sort out their differences on their own, it does make sense—and it is indeed a legitimate international concern—to ask whether and in what way(s) assistance from the outside could contribute toward these ends. And in this context we turn to the concept of “the international community.” Inevitably, this leaves us with the question of what exactly do we mean by “The International Community?”

The International Community and Its Agents

In the broadest sense, The International Community may be understood to encompass the totality of concerned public opinion as represented by national governments; intergovernmental organizations (IGOs; in particular such IGOs that have been established to further the aims of broad international agreements); nongovernmental organizations (NGOs); multinational or transnational commercial companies; mass media; and even influential individuals. Clearly, we are not speaking of a coherent entity, which could be readily operationalized.

Narrowing the scope, I suggest we focus on IGOs as the most prominent bodies to act on behalf of the International Community.

Thus, likely candidates may include organizations such as the UN and, in our parts of the world, NATO, OSCE, the Council of Europe, EU and the CIS. Let us take a quick look at the respective organizations with a view to their actual or prospective usefulness in the present context.

From the perspective of the principle of subsidiarity, the Commonwealth of Independent States—the CIS—should be the international body most ideally suited to address the question of peace and stability in and around Chechnia. After all (and stretching the geographical concepts a bit), Chechnia is located in the middle of CIS' own backyard, and charity begins at home, right? Using the CIS for this purpose has, however, hardly been seriously contemplated by anyone. This is first and foremost a reminder of the real (as opposed to the nominal) nature of this organization. Bluntly put, the main raison d'être of the CIS has been to preserve a measure of Russian hegemony within the former Soviet Empire. It is, therefore, tempting to rule out any usefulness of the CIS in this connection. However, this might not necessarily be so. Whether to explore possible CIS mechanisms to seek a path to peace and stability in Chechnia would, basically, depend on whether or not the Russian Federation would find such an approach compatible with its overall interests.

Turning to the opposite end of the range of eligible IGOs, we find the United Nations. The UN would, in principle, be endowed with the highest legal and moral authority with which to address the issue. But the UN decision-making structure being what it is, and with Russia as a veto-holding power in the UN Security Council, it is hard to conceive of the UN as an effective problem-solving instrument with regard to Chechnia. No doubt, elements of the UN system could be brought to address specific aspects of the crisis. This is already the case; through the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the UN has demonstrated active involvement in alleviating the plight of the huge number of Chechen refugees (or Internally Displaced People—IDPs) in the region, especially as they poured into neighboring Ingushetia in October/November 1999. Undeniably a necessary and commendable task, but the predicament of the refugees/IDPs is the result and not the cause of the lack of peace and stability.

I also mentioned NATO—the Western military alliance which a year ago emerged as the main proponent of the concept of humanitarian interventions. However well-intentioned, the NATO operation in Yugoslavia in 1999 was not a completely unmitigated success—whether seen from a legal point of view or judged in terms of the military or humanitarian achievements. In any case, and logistical considerations aside: For obvious reasons of Realpolitik, the NATO/Kosovo model does not lend itself to application to Chechnia: Russia is not Serbia.

The European Union has plenty of ambitions of being a major world player. At its present stage of evolution, the EU is, however, still primarily structured and geared to address its own internal developments (including managing collateral damage resulting from its enlargement process). Judging from past performance and experience, it might be difficult to envisage the EU being able to formulate a common policy that could effectively contribute to peace and stability in and around Chechnia. Provided a sufficiently high build-up of internal political demands and pressure from key member-states, the EU may, however, conceivably be employed as an instrument for coordinating diplomatic and economic responses (using, for example, its TACIS mechanisms) aimed at influencing Russian policies in the region in a desirable direction.

The Council of Europe: By suspending Russia's membership, the Council has shown a laudable and refreshing will to respond to human rights violations. Whether this move will—in the short run—actually contribute in any way to bringing about peace and stability is, however, a different matter.

The one intergovernmental organization which so far has a substantive track record of direct involvement in the matter of promoting peace and stability in and around Chechnia, is the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the OSCE. And since this is also the only such IGO with which I have had direct personal experience in this particular matter, I would like to give a presentation of the scope and character of this involvement as well as an account of the issues and obstacles that had to be addressed, and of the experience that can be drawn from this exercise. Thus, we need to go back a few years in time, to the 1994-1996 hostilities, and briefly recapitulate the main developments.

The OSCE Experience

The decision to open an OSCE Assistance group to Chechnia was made at the 16th meeting of the OSCE Permanent Council on 11 April, 1995. The Assistance Group (the AG) was given a mandate including the following tasks to be performed in conjunction with Russian federal and local authorities, and in conformity with the legislation of the Russian Federation:

- Promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the establishment of facts concerning their violation; help foster the development of democratic institutions and processes, including the restoration of the local organs of authority; assist in the preparation of possible new constitutional agreements and in the holding and monitoring of elections;

- Facilitate the delivery to the region by international and nongovernmental organizations of humanitarian aid for victims of the crisis, wherever they may be located;
- Provide assistance to the authorities of the Russian Federation and to international organizations in ensuring the speediest possible return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes in the crisis region;
- Promote a peaceful resolution of the crisis and a stabilization of the situation in the Chechen republic in conformity with the principle of territorial integrity of the Russian Federation and in accordance with OSCE principles;
- Pursue dialog and negotiations, as appropriate, through participation in "round tables," with a view to establish a cease-fire agreement and eliminating sources of tension;
- Support the creation of mechanisms guaranteeing the rule of law, order and public safety.

The Assistance Group began working in Grozny on 26 April, 1995. Despite the importance and urgency of several of the other tasks included in the AG's broad mandate (indeed impossibly broad, but conveniently flexible), the most prominent part of its activities up until 1997 was the AG's mediation efforts. Tireless shuttle diplomacy by the then Head of the Group, ambassador Tim Guldemann, was instrumental in facilitating the negotiation process that led to the Khasaviurt Agreement of 31 August, 1996, which brought an end to the armed conflict. The Khasaviurt Agreement also provided for a pull-out of all troops, and stipulated that "agreement on the principles of mutual relations between the Russian Federation and the Chechen Republic is to be worked out by 31 December, 2001." Also in terms of the Agreement, presidential and parliamentary elections took place on 27 January, 1997, under the auspices of (and actually organized by) the OSCE AG. The elections, which were monitored by some 200 international observers, were declared free and fair by the OSCE, and also recognized by the Russian Federation as legitimate.

Thus, by March 1997 the accomplishments of the AG were substantial and, indeed, impressive. However, at this stage, the general attitude of the parties involved seems to have been that the most pressing tasks in the AG's mandate had been dealt with successfully and once and for all. This view was explicitly laid down in a Statement of the Russian Federation to the OSCE Permanent Council of 13 March, 1997, which maintained, inter alia, that

- "...the part of the OSCE Assistance Group's mandate which is related to mediation efforts in the context of settling the armed conflict and smoothing the way to negotiations has been carried out in full.
- "The dialog that has begun between the federal authorities and the new leadership of Chechnia ...is ...being conducted directly and excludes any mediation efforts whatsoever by the OSCE representatives."

Thus, although the basic text of the Assistance Group's mandate remained unchanged, the tasks were effectively and substantially restricted in scope. It should, however, be added that the AG did assist in bringing about yet another important accomplishment: The signing in Moscow on 12 May, 1997 by presidents Yeltsin and Maskhadov of the Treaty on Peace and Principles of Mutual Relations between the Russian Federation and the Chechen Republic.

However, most important—and disturbing: Despite the agreements, the Chechen crisis remained unresolved. Talks as envisaged in the Khasaviurt Agreement, on the political status of Chechnia, were eventually discontinued as no progress could be made in overcoming the main obstacle, i.e. Chechnia's insistence on full independence. In retrospect it would thus appear that the dialog between the federal and Chechen authorities that was supposed to render the AG's mediation role redundant, was soon to run out of steam.

From mid-1997 onwards, the Assistance Group's further activities were reoriented toward those parts of the mandate that could still be considered operative. In this, the AG was necessarily guided by the aforementioned Russian Statement of 13 March which specifically mentioned three priority areas:

- monitoring of the human rights situation;
- assistance in establishing democratic institutions and in ensuring the return of refugees and displaced persons; and
- coordination of efforts in providing humanitarian aid.

Clearly, the AG's mandate remained sufficiently broad and flexible, and obviously addressing still existing, real and pressing needs, so as to make it unnecessary to invent new tasks in order to justify the AG's continued existence. Indeed, the pulling-out of other international bodies, leaving the OSCE as the only remaining international organization with a representation in Chechnia, would seem to lend yet another important dimension to its continued presence.

At the same time, developments in Chechnia during 1997-1999 made it progressively more difficult in practical terms for the AG to perform its tasks. Increasingly, the modalities of the AG's work came to be defined by the security environment. During 1998, the security situation in Chechnia was deteriorating to an extent which reduced significantly the possibilities of the AG to perform its tasks in a meaningful way, while at the same time observing acceptable standards of safety for its own personnel.

Extensive security measures notwithstanding, the AG four times during 1998 was forced to evacuate its expatriate staff from Grozny to Moscow. The last such evacuation took place on 16 December, 1998. Unlike previous such periods this latest evacuation was subsequently—by decision of the OSCE Chairman-in-Office (CiO)—prolonged repeatedly in view of the further deteriorating security situation. In order to ensure continuity and regularity of the AG's on-the-spot operations, working visits to Grozny by AG members were made three times during January-March 1999. However, at the OSCE Permanent Council meeting of 11 March, 1999, it was announced by the CiO that the evacuation regime—although still meant to be a temporary measure—was tightened up to exclude any further travels to Chechnia by AG members. Thus the AG continued to operate from Moscow, where temporary office facilities had been established at the Embassy of Norway (as a consequence of Norway having the OSCE Chairmanship in 1999), while the AG Grozny office at the same time was kept fully operational.

Since early 1999, the Chechen side repeatedly expressed the desirability of including a third party—preferably the OSCE—in a hopefully resumed negotiation process with the federal authorities. In a series of talks with high-ranking Russian officials, the AG consistently confirmed its readiness to undertake such involvement—if and when the parties should so desire. The prevailing view in Moscow, however, continued to follow the restrictive line expressed in the RF Statement of 13 March, 1997, which maintained that the part of the AG's mandate related to mediation efforts had been carried out in full, and that no further third-party involvement in a resumed Russian-Chechen dialogue was envisaged. Indeed, one of the most outspoken advocates of resumption of the Russian-Chechen dialog, RF Minister for Nationalities Ramazan Abdulatipov, expressed the view that in North Caucasian conflicts, historical experience shows that any would-be mediator invariably tends to become a party to the conflict.

Whatever prospects there might have been for a renewed mediation role for the AG they were effectively dispelled by the events that took place during the second half of 1999: First the hostilities unleashed by the incursions (from 7 August) into Daghestan of Chechen-trained armed groups led by the notorious warlords and trouble-makers Shamil Basaev and Al-Khattab, thereafter (from 3 September) Russian air bombings of Chechen territory (from 22 September also including the city of Grozny), and from 30 September the invasion of Chechnia by federal ground forces, setting off an armed campaign yet to be brought to a conclusion.

At the end of 1999 the Assistance Group's functions had been reduced to an absolute minimum. After its "classical" role as a mediator had been abandoned already in 1997, for various reasons also its role in the humanitarian assistance and human rights fields had been scaled down considerably. Due to the renewed armed hostilities in Chechnia, in October 1999 the remaining AG local staff in Chechnia had to be evacuated to neighboring Ingushetia, and all humanitarian aid projects had to be put on hold. From August 1999 the AG had also come under increasing criticism from the Russian authorities for its reporting, which included sensitive topics such as human rights violations perpetrated by the Russian side as well as appeals for assistance from Chechen authorities to the International Community. In response to the attitude of the RF authorities, who displayed a progressively more restrictive interpretation of the AG's mandate, the AG scaled down its coverage of human rights violations in the course of the military campaign in Chechnia and reduced its reporting to a minimum. Nevertheless, the relations with the RF Ministry of Foreign Affairs continued to cool down, as witnessed inter alia by a succession of Moscow newspaper articles—ostensibly using MFA sources—with critical coverage of the AG's activities.

At the same time, the RF authorities gradually adopted the view that the previously entered agreements—the Khasaviurt Agreement of 31 August, 1996 and the Russian-Chechen Peace Treaty of 12 May, 1997—were no longer legally binding, and renounced their recognition of the OSCE-sponsored presidential and parliamentary elections that had been held in January 1997.

Until the OSCE Istanbul summit in November 1999 the OSCE—just like most other bodies representing the international community—had been hesitant to openly criticize the RF government for its actions in Chechnia. Although the summit reconfirmed the mandate of the OSCE Assistance Group to Chechnia and paved the way for the subsequent visit (mid-December 1999) of the OSCE CiO to the Northern Caucasus, the RF government continued to be adamant that no political role for the OSCE or its AG in the context of the conflict was envisaged. Upon his return from the visit, the OSCE CiO made a 4-point proposal to facilitate a solution to the conflict:

1. Immediate cease-fire in and around Grozny.
2. The establishment of a dialog between the parties with OSCE participation.
3. A regional conference with participation of the presidents of Daghestan, Ingushetia and North Ossetia, as well as RF and Chechen representatives.
4. Escalation of international humanitarian assistance to the region and improved coordination of such assistance.

This initiative was, however, rejected by the Russian side.

Since January 2000, the AG has been operating under the Austrian OSCE Chairmanship. A reconnaissance visit to Chechnia was made by AG members in March, and there are plans to partially relocate the AG back to Chechnia (most likely to the Znamenskoie location in NW Chechnia—an area under firm federal control). Otherwise, no great changes have been reported to have taken place, with regard to the attitudes of the RF government or the strategies pursued by the OSCE CiO.

Conclusions

Returning to our initial question: "How Can the International Community Contribute to Peace and Stability in and around Chechnia?," and on the basis of the lessons learnt from the OSCE experience, it may be tempting to give a rather pessimistic reply. All told, the OSCE may in fact be the international body that is best equipped to address the issue. At the same time, the limitations are obvious: The OSCE is an organization that operates on the basis of the principle of consensus, and hence, it can only be as effective as its member-states—excluding none—want it to be.

At the same time, and although my focus has been on the OSCE, we should not forget that there are other IGOs—agents of the international community—that may serve as mechanisms for channeling public opinion into positive action. But this presupposes that such a public opinion exists and can be sustained, a prerequisite that largely depends on the extent to which the issue may capture the focused attention of the international mass media.

Proceeding from the presumption that there are basically two main types of strategies to choose between, viz. (1) a coercive/punitive strategy; and (2) constructive engagement, the realistic choice for an organization such as the OSCE narrows down to finding a workable version of the second option.

And even that one is subject to serious limitations: With a major member state being a party to the conflict, and insisting that it is a purely internal matter, no progress is feasible.

Still, it cannot be completely excluded that a situation could arise (as it did back in 1995) when Russia may find it to be in its own best interest to avail itself of the good offices of the OSCE to seek a way out of the seemingly never-ending imbroglio. Everybody—including the Russian leadership—professes to agree that the conflict cannot be solved by military means alone: A political solution has to be found. To achieve this, huge efforts must be made in several directions. Humanitarian needs must be alleviated, refugees/IDPs must be given a safe return to what is left of their homeland, infrastructure must be rebuilt, and—most difficult of all—the distrust caused by the military campaign with its deaths and destructions must be dispelled. It is not realistic to expect any quick and easy solutions.

But, although a comprehensive political solution may not be within reach, much can still be done to assist in bringing about some improvement in an otherwise miserable situation. If the security situation could be made tolerable, international NGOs with humanitarian or human-rights agendas could be encouraged to involve themselves directly in the region. To assist such NGOs in their beneficial activities could be a positive contribution from the OSCE AG, which at the same time should maintain a presence and a readiness to offer its good services in terms of its mandate, keeping hope alive for such a time to occur when opportunities to fulfill its mandate may be a more realistic proposition than the present situation may offer. Meanwhile, the AG could function as a much-needed channel of communication and information, its very presence also serving as a message to the Chechens, the Russians and to the outside world alike, that Chechnia has not been forgotten by the international community.

---

COMMENTS ON CONTRIBUTIONS

---

Taylor SEYBOLT

---

I would like to thank Lena Jonson and Murad Esenov for convening a fascinating series of talks in a seminar that is very useful to all of us. My comments are made from the perspective of someone who has academic training and is not a policymaker in any sense. The prescriptions I offer are abstract in nature.

Let me begin by addressing the question of who or what is the “international community”? I am interested primarily in who makes up the international community. (A focus on what it is would look at international norms and principles.) My idea of who comprises the international community is, first of all states, secondly the international organizations, nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) and multinational corporations. We have heard very little about the possible roles for NGOs in conflict resolution, but they potentially play a very important one, which I will mention later in my comments. Naming the types of actors, rather than simply using the term “international community,” begins to indicate the range of roles

---

Dr. Taylor Seybolt, Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (Sweden).

---